STAN LAUREL IN "THE EGG"

SYNOPSIS

They called him The Egg because he had a soft-boiled heart.

Riding to work one morning in his car (lumber truck of the Rex Lumber Co.) a chance gust of wind carried a letter into his hands. It came from the car next to his, which was occupied by The Villain.

After a nonchalant perusal of the letter, which contained a message revealing a blackmailing plot against the Rex Lumber Company, he put the letter into his pocket and out of his mind.

Both cars were headed in the same direction, toward the lumber yard. Both men were destined to meet again. The Egg was merely an employ  e, and when he arrived he immediately set about his daily routine. This is interrupted by a strike, which The Egg leads until the arrival of the black-browed foreman. For safety, The Egg seeks the president's office. When the villain arrived, he went up to the president and demanded that he sell his interest in the concern. The president refused, whereupon The Villain threatened to force him by means of false evidence.

The Egg - happening to overhear the conversation - produced the letter divulging the conspiracy and completely exonerated the President. The president's daughter, present at the time, rewards The Egg in her own fashion.
